PULLING THE WRONG BELL.

Several years ago a fine Western steamer of the largest class was plowing her way down stream with a full head on. The time was early in the morning, the sun had not yet cooled his beams in the anurky waters of the Mississippi; few of the passengers were astir, and the boat quiet and still, save the regular scream of the iron throat, was making fine headway. Suddenly the engineer's bell rang out a furious and alarming summons, which being translated into the vernacular, mean 'Slow her! The man at the steam obeyed the mandate, and with his hand upon the lever awaited anxiously for the next call.

It soon came, and louder yet, 'Stop HOOTS AND SHORE, '!rah 'Some trouble ahead,' thought the engineer; but hardy had the idea passed whough this mind which the busy bell again pealed forth-

Back her!' Steam was let on in an instant, and seizing the leaver the man commenced working the engine by hand; but the wheel had not yet completed the first retrograde revolution when a louder tintinabulation tinkled out successful-

Having obeyed the command, and supposing that all was right at last the man quitted his post for a moment, and stepped out on the guards for the purpose of ascertaining what the trouble had been, when suddenly the ever busy-bell was again heard: 'Slow her!"

Before he could put his hand on the screw, the bell again ordered: 'Stop her? immediately after, Back her!' and 'Go ahead!' Instead of going ahead, the engineer scratched his own, and then applying his mouth to the speaking-tube addressed the pilot thus—but stop, let us turn for a moment to the pilot and see what was going on in his do-

Now this backing and filling had excited the attention of officers and crew, and as the pilot and engineer having obtained relief, met half way down on the boilerdeck, captain and clerk, mate and steward, barkeeper and chambermaid, all hastened to the post of observation, and ere the two combatants could join issue they were seized and held, and an investigation of the affair was entered into.

While all this was in progress neither boat nor bell had been touched, but the same singular succession of orders was going on, and the two assistants, above and below, were meditating a little affair of their own when that of the principals had been settled.

The mystery was apparently pas solution, but the captain bethought him of a possible cause, and stepping to a state-room, in the social ball, kicked the door open, and there stood a lanky young Tennesseau who had embarked at Memphis the previous night, very actively jerking at a cord that ran through his room in the fur-
